

In my library, the Social Security Bulletin (SSA 1.22:) is a display periodical. The most current issue on our shelves is v. 69, no. 2 (2009). I noticed the following cover article:

Retiring in Debt? Differences Between the 1995 and 2004 Near-Retiree Cohorts (p. 13)

With so many people concerned both about the economic situation and worried about their retirement, this seems like a good article to highlight in your library. The Bulletin is also available on the web at <http://www.ssa.gov/policy/docs/ssb/>, so this highlight could be done on your website or blog as well.

The website has posted v.69, no. 3 and it also has a good "should I be worried?" type of article titled, The Disappearing Defined Benefit Pension and Its Potential Impact on the Retirement Incomes of Baby Boomers .

Many of us already have the mindset to keep an eye out for opportunities to show people that government documents can be meaningful in everyday life, but I don't think reminders hurt.

Anything good catch your eye lately?
